In view of the installation of a large laundry plant at the Marine barracks at Parris Island, S. C., Marine Corps recruiting stations in Washington and elsewhere have been asked to make special efforts to recruit men who have had experience in that industry. A quartermaster sergeant is wanted to take charge of the work, this grade of non-commissioned officer receiving more pay than almost any enlisted man in any service. Other non-commissioned officers will be appointed from the recruits fitted by experience to take charge of laundry machinery. The plant, which is one of the largest of its kind in the country, will be ready for operation next month.
